

Miss Brownie read one of the simple parables, and the sweetness of a woman's voice telling of Jesus and the work of grace in the human heart seemed very attractive to our Maori friends.

The Maori Soldier's testimony was well received, told out first in Maori, and then to us in English. The old story! Drink coming to the Maori, made.

CIVILIZATION A DUNG.

rather than a blessing, and caused the work of Salvation to be all the harder. Still, for two years this Maori has served God, and knows the difference himself, as also do those about him.

The native missionary gave out the first Psalm as a song, which we sang in the Maori language (English in our hearts and Maori words on our tongues), giving the best pronunciation we could from the letters in the hymn book.

The Major told us of converted Joe the Maori of Kaiapoi, whose testimony was that he was not whitewashed, but washed white in the blood of Jesus. I tried to show how this was not only written down by the recording angel so that they would come up against us in the day, when the great court would sit, and when the Maori judge understood the proceedings of a court and judge, but (and this also) wrote themselves in our human heart, causing sorrow, and misery, and fear. We also tried to make it plain that the blood of Jesus cannot only wash away the black round above, but also could wash and change the heart, bringing joy and peace and preparation for the judgment day.

I think we were well understood. And then came the invitation and penitential form, and kneeling at this point-form was a Maori who could sing and loved the Saviour, but had backslidden. He determined one more to treat and serve Jesus, and so, with a little personal conversation, he would up.

Before leaving our friend Roro, the chief, in his own way, beautifully expressed his feelings in reference to the backslider who had returned. He regarded him as a sheep wandering from the fold, and, said Roro, as he shook our hands, "I so glad you came to fetch that poor sheep back to the fold again."

Oh, yes, our Great Shepherd has many flocks and sheep and lambs, and it is our business to gather them into the fold to feed the great God.

T. H. HOWARD.

with so much prejudice and adversity, that the work has in their districts not proved so successful as elsewhere. The Glasgow district especially has borne much fruit; and that the work is rather advanced than declined during the summer months is an astonishing fact, and says much for the energy of the organization. Although, less than upon 9,000 individuals have professed to find the Saviour at the meetings during the past year, and of those a great proportion have joined the various words and exposure, expressing sympathy with the work and gratitude for the good effected; and subsequently no less than seven of them, regardless of denominational differences, addressed a series of meetings held in the barracks. The past year has been marked by two notable features—a wonderful revival

The upright convert was returning from a meeting one night when he was overtaken by a girl in the street. In the excitement of the moment he forgot his jeans. This broke her down completely, and drew forth the sad tale of privation, sorrow and sin and misery. Food and lodging were procured for her and she was subsequently brought to the home in a state of extreme destitution. She had starved out well, is thoroughly saved, and now lives with her sisters. Her health had been so undermined that the doctor feared she might die of consumption in the home. When informed of this one said she was "quite ready: for the Lord's will is mine."

gown in a lamentable state of desuetude—a poor orphan girl who had never been upon the streets, but had just gone astray through neglect and want of work. She has been with us four months now. Two nights ago she came to the officers at midnight in anxiety about her soul. She is now rejoicing in the Lord.

are counted converts to 'false' Christian systems, such as the Catholic Church and a numerous nominal Christian community which does not make an avowed conversion; so that probably one million is considerably beyond the number of converts as we understand conversion.

But one appalling fact covers these white squares with a dark, dark shadow, and almost shuts out every ray of hope for the conversion of the heathen world; for while 1,000,000 converts have been won to Christ, the black squares have increased 200; that is, there are to-day 197,000,000 more heathen and Mohammedans than there were when the Staff-Captain Smith and Captain Saurau Das have been set apart for special duties, and it is proposed to raise for the Indian War an amount sufficient to maintain the war in a scale bearing some reasonable proportion to the vastness of these claims.

Thinking of his home and friends,
In countries far away.
His memory takes him back once more
Unto his childhood's home;
Once more he sees his mother's face,
His father's aged form.

Within that dismal cell,
 He heard a sound float o'er his ear
 Which he remembered well.
 How oft in childhood's early days,
 His darling mother's voice
 The world had sung to him before;
 And she had sung his choice.
 Rock of Ages, defend me,
 The Arms-bread was playing,
 Let no hide myself in "Thine."
 With trembling voice he's saying,
 His work begun—the band passed on—
 But God's Almighty Spirit
 Remained within that dismal cell,
 To bring salvation to it.

A little intellectual acrobatics, and I have in my remarkable agility. With the New Testament in hand, I began to search for discrepancies in the Scriptures, and quibbled as much as I could on trifling textual irregularities as the most sticking point on the recent Revision Commission. From this I proceeded to the consideration of what appeared to be direct contradictions in the Bible. While I affected to agree that ly, I failed to perceive how easily a right be removed by this simple alibi—that there is a radical distinction between things which are contrary to reason and thing which are de jure reason. As we have to make admissions in philosophy and science, so should we be debored from doing so in spiritual matters? We are not to loose as an inexplicable mystery how life enters the human body, how it leaves it, also the law governing molecular and chemical combinations, simply because we feel them

The musical notation is for the song "The Girl Who Came to Supper". It features a treble clef and a key signature of one flat (B-flat). The melody is written on a five-line staff. The lyrics "The Girl Who Came to Supper" are written below the staff. The notation includes various musical symbols such as notes, rests, and a double bar line.

small and vigor. The crowd thronged well forward, and a reserve force of Army saluted out with brooms, sticks and pokers, and laid around in a style so thoroughly effective that a number of the assailants measured their length upon the street. Some members of the Army, however, showed severe punishment, and blood was freely shed. A constable, who is also a member of the Army, rendered them considerable aid, and the fight was at last ended when Mayor DoVoe came out, and walking in among their companies ordered them to keep the peace. Then the parties separated, and slunkly after
